Portfolio activity and comment

The positive sentiment evident in January carried on into February with the US S&P 500 and UK's FTSE 100 recording gains of 1.03% and 1.51% respectively. Similarly, the dominant reason appeared to be a sense of relief over a calming of US-China trade negotiations. However, further support came from economic data indicating both consumers and corporate sentiment bounced back from the US government shutdown in January. A slight fall in headline inflation and dovish comments from the Federal Reserve put a lid on further interest rate rises and this, in turn, was good for Emerging Markets. As the US fourth-quarter corporate earnings season drew to a close, 70% of companies had beat expectations but the more important future guidance was a little more cautious. Nevertheless, US company earnings growing at 13% is roughly double their European counterparts. The German stalled in Q4 and manufacturing fell across the eurozone. However, it is the lingering political conflicts, mainly Spain and Italy, which continues to put off international investors. It was a similar story in the UK where Brexit uncertainty looks to be going to the wire at the end of March. In such a fast changing political environment, both Sterling and FTSE are unusually prone to short-term trading and less so to the economic fundamentals which remain remarkably good. The fund rose 1.2% in February.
