

EF FACET Balanced Discretionary Portfolio Fund

November 2018

Information in this factsheet is at the last valuation point in November 2018 (except where indicated).

Investment Objective

The investment objective of the Fund is to provide a long-term total return above that of the UK consumer price index. The Fund will be actively managed and invest in multiple asset classes with a portfolio of transferable securities which may include investment trusts, collective investment schemes, deposits, money market instruments, derivatives and other alternative investments such as structured products, commodity and property funds. The investment manager has the discretion to weight the portfolio towards any investment type, or geographical region, at any time provided it is compatible with the investment objective, risk parameters and policy of the Fund as a whole.

Portfolio activity and comment

The US mid-term elections held no real surprises but concerns over US-China trade tensions resurfaced despite some indication that President Trump had found some common ground with President Xi of China during the G20 summit. The S&P500 happened to finish the month +2.8% at 2,760.17 but this gave little cause for comfort given the intra-month swing of 180-points in a volatile month. US economic indicators remained good, as did the UK. Sterling initially strengthened to $1.31, threatening to dent the profits of large UK multinationals that make up the bulk of the index. However, despite falling again to $1.27 towards month end, the FTSE fell 2% in November reinforcing the view that, amid the Brexit debate and political uncertainty, there is a point at which a weaker Sterling stops being unequivocal good news for the FTSE 100 as foreign capital flight takes a bigger toll. Political concerns were not limited to the UK. Europe had its fair share of issues with, arguably, Italy proving a bigger headache for the EU than Brexit. Poor EU economic data didn't help sentiment; Q3 GDP stalled and manufacturing, output and consumer confidence were all down. The fund was down 0.62% in November.
